Sink or swim, use it or lose it

Story and photos by Angelica Blenich

When you drive into the hamlet of Cardiff it's hard not to instantly notice the signs everywhere.

They first appear at the edge of town on Monck Road and then scattered throughout the neighbourhood.

They are not large or obtrusive, but rather modest rectangular shaped signs that feature an arrow, a picture of a swimmer and two words embolden in black font written in capital letters.

Public pool.

In amongst this small, sleepy hamlet with a population of about 575 is an outdoor swimming pool.

A feature many communities would envy.

Built in the early 1960s by miners who wanted to create an attraction for their community, the Bicroft swimming pool has been, up until recently, just that.

Nestled in behind a park lies a glistening pool, with blue sparkling water, a change room facility and a fence around the perimeter.

The pool looks inviting and colourful, with lifejackets splayed about, two lifeguard chairs on opposite sides and flutterboards stacked in piles on the deck.

Squeals of laughter and sounds of splashing can be heard from the pathway leading up to the facility, cues that the pool is in use.

When I arrive on a sunny and warm August day there are about seven people at the swimming pool, two of those being the paid lifeguard staff.

Backpacks and shoes are strewn across the change room, a list of rules and health regulations is posted on the wall. I venture out onto the deck area and survey the surroundings.

I find myself at the shallow end. Large, painted letters read "three feet." I dip my toe in and am met with a cool, refreshing sensation.

Erin Leathem and Wade Niezen are the lifeguards on duty that day. The former a university student from the Bancroft area, the latter a teenager who cottages near the pool. Open for the months of July and August, the pool is used regularly, say the lifeguards, although it could always be used more.

Heated by the sun, the water temperature depends on the weather, says Leathem.

Open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. on weekdays, 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturdays, the pool is open to all ages at a cost of $2 a day for children and $3 for adults.

Many avid pool users instead opt to purchase a season badge, which for $29 gives you unlimited use of the pool.

There are about 10 kids who frequent the pool almost every day, says Leathem.

The peak day, when two camps were at the pool, there were 50 kids enjoying the water.

The maximum number allowed in the pool and on the deck is 82, however, that number hasn't been hit this past summer.

The pool is open even if it's raining, only closing if lightning and thunder appear.

A daily aquafit class is popular, with about eight or nine women attending on average.

June Wylie, 62, comes to aquafit everyday, unless it's raining.

Wylie is not alone and on this particular day. Seven other woman join her for the afternoon class.

Sandra Brenham is a frequent visitor to the Cardiff swimming pool, coming about two or three times a week to participate in aquafit classes. The Paudash lake resident invested in a pool badge, seen here, which at a cost of $29 gave her unlimited access to the pool for the summer.

Facility under-utilized despite community support

Most come for the exercise, others just enjoy being in the water.

A full-time resident of Paudash Lake, Sandra Brenham visits the pool two or three times a week.

She has only been in the lake once, preferring to swim in a pool.

Brenham has a season's badge affixed to her bathing suit, a sign of her commitment to the facility.

During the 45-minute aquafit session the women move around and try different exercises, under the instruction of Leathem.

They joke, poke fun at each other and share baking tips.

There is a sense of community as the women giggle, making it obvious the pool isn't meant just for kids.

While most of the women claim to come for the exercise it quickly becomes clear they come for more.

Fourteen-year-old Cameron Rowley frequents the pool because it's something to do in Cardiff.

The high school student who is entering Grade 10 this fall comes to swim and sometimes just to visit with friends.

"I come about every day," he says.

Leathem believes the pool helps keep kids out of trouble.

Highlands East Councillor Steve Kauffeldt, whose ward encompasses Cardiff, wishes more people would visit the pool every day and see the value in it.

"There is such a fight for a pool," says the councillor, referring to the county swimming pool initiative. "However, our numbers keep going down."

The councillor is fearful if numbers don't turn around it won't be long before the pool is closed for good.

More than 30 children registered for swimming lessons last summer. This year there were less than five, says Kauffeldt.

The councillor has tried to stress the severity of the situation to his community. However, he says he's never met someone who doesn't like the idea of a swimming pool.

"People do value the pool, because I hear them say I don't want to lose the pool," says Kauffeldt. "If you ask people would you like the pool to close, I know exactly what their answer will be 100 per cent of the time."

In May of this year the municipality hosted a public meeting to address the ongoing decline of pool users.

Kauffeldt said about 50 people attended, 10 per cent of the area's population.

"They gave me all these great suggestions," he said.

Suggestions included making the facility more accessible and installing a heater for the water. However, upgrades cost money and the councillor can't justify it without a steady number of users.

"It's a double-edged sword," he says. "To get the people in you have to do the work, but you can't do the work if there's no people."

A resident of Cardiff for the past 12 years, Kauffeldt believes the pool is a gem for the community. He swims there on a regular basis.

When it was first constructed, the pool was a volunteer initiative, says Highlands East environment supervisor Glen Covert.

"The miners' wives were the lifeguards," he says.

Nowadays finding qualified lifeguards has become a challenge for the municipality.

It was originally a heated pool, up until about 14 years ago when the heater stopped working and was never replaced.

"It burnt a tank of oil a week," says Covert.

If the same heater were still operating, it would add $1,000 a week to the cost of operating the pool, estimates the environment supervisor.

Covert says it costs Highlands East about $40,000 a year to operate the pool. That includes maintenance, wages, hydro and more.

Some years, due to repairs, the pool has cost upwards of $90,000.

Every summer the income generated from it is around $3,000, says Kauffeldt.

If the pool was closed in the future Kauffeldt says he would be devastated.

However, keeping the pool open is only an option if it's viable, says Covert.

"It's not used enough, I think it's a shame," he says. "All these kids here, why don't they use it?"

The environment supervisor points to electronic devices and modern distractions as tough competition for the pool.

"I really don't want to see it close, that's why I was hoping when we had that meeting this spring it would open people's eyes that if they don't use it they'll lose it," says Covert.

The supervisor points to the unpredictable weather this summer as a factor in the decline of users.

While the topic of an indoor pool and recreation centre is widely debated throughout the county, especially around election time, Kauffeldt has difficulty putting his support behind it.

"Haliburton needs a pool. Haliburton has a pool. It's in Cardiff," says Kauffeldt. "We have one and it's a struggle … I have a very different take on it than any other councillor in the county because we have one in my ward."

Kauffeldt is opposed to closing the facility in Cardiff because it's already been paid for and only has to be maintained at this point.

While he says there are still options to consider, in order to keep the pool open, the municipality is getting to the end of its rope.

With the pool closed now for the season, the future of the Cardiff facility remains unclear.

"Cardiff is a very unique community … [the pool] is something we're proud of. It's something nobody else has," says Kauffeldt.

Aquafit classes take place every day at the pool in Cardiff, taught by the lifeguard on duty. This summer, classes had between eight and nine participants each day. Exercise was cited as the No. 1 reason participants came to the classes.

Coalition for Equitable Water Flow – Haliburton Sector, TSW

Website: www.cewf.ca E-mail: cewfchair@yahoo.ca

Summer 2014

Open Letter to: Candidates in the 2014 Municipal Elections for:

Algonquin Highlands; Dysart et al; Havelock-Belmont-Methuen; Highlands East; Minden Hills; North Kawartha; and Trent Lakes.

Coalition for Equitable Water Flow

Position on Issues Facing Voters in the Haliburton Sector of the Trent River Watershed

The Coalition for Equitable Water Flow (CEWF) was formed in August 2006 to represent the interests of approximately 40,000 Ontario taxpayers who own residential shoreline property on the 41 reservoir and 20 flow-through lakes within the Haliburton sector of the Trent River watershed located in Haliburton County and northern Peterborough County. The property owners in these lake communities contribute approximately 80% of the municipal tax base and expect to see this reflected in local decision-making.

The Coalition has identified a number of critical issues relating to watershed management:

1. The March 2008 Report of the federally appointed Panel on the Future of the Trent-Severn Waterway (TSW) "It's all about the Water" identified the need for a new 'integrated' approach to water management at the watershed level and significant new investment in infrastructure.

2. In looking at the Trent watershed, almost 100% of the summertime flow at Lakefield comes from the reservoir lakes. This is the water that feeds the canal portion of the Trent Severn Waterway and provides drinking water to Peterborough and other municipalities. However, almost none of the reservoir system falls within the mandate of a Conservation Authority or any overarching watershed council. Instead, water management is mainly the responsibility of the Trent Severn Waterway. This is cause for concern and an opportunity for action by county and municipal levels of government in the upper watershed.

3. The dams on the reservoir lakes comprise a significant portion of the TSW infrastructure, and they require sustained capital funding for repair and maintenance. A 2012 review of Parks Canada assets identified 15 reservoir dams as being in poor or very poor condition and estimated the cost of deferred maintenance work for the Haliburton sector at $33.9 million.

4. A recent Water Management Study conducted by the engineering firm AECOM for the TSW noted that improved water management tools were required and recommended that Parks Canada invest in a constraint-based water management model that would identify 'management ranges' for all of the lakes, reservoirs and rivers of the TSW system. This has not happened.

5. In 2013 the lack of timely information during the spring floods and the fall high water levels highlighted the need for better communications to both routine and emergency water management issues. Reviews of the flood response noted that (1) regions lacking a Conservation Authority suffered from a lack of reliable flood plain information and adequate public communications; and (2) the TSW needs a management tool to support decision-making during extreme weather events. Since then communications at the federal and provincial level have improved, thanks in part to strong municipal leadership in Haliburton County.

The Coalition believes there is an opportunity for municipalities to take further action or demonstrate support for a range of water management issues. As a candidate for municipal office you are invited to respond to the following questions so that we can advise our membership with regard to your position, and your personal commitment on these issues.

Questions from the Coalition

1. Do you agree that municipalities have a role to play in working to improve water management in the Haliburton sector of the Trent River watershed? If so what is your personal commitment in this regard?

2. Do you agree that, rather than seeking the establishment of Conservation Authorities in those areas currently lacking a CA, there is merit in municipalities contracting the existing CAs to provide specific expertise and services such as low water response planning or flood plain mapping for reservoir lakes deemed to have significant flood risk?

3. Do you support the key recommendation of the AECOM Water Management Study that the TSW adopt a constraint-based water management model capable of considering lakespecific navigation and environmental constraints such as those already identified by Coalition member lake associations? If so, what would you do about it?

4. Will you urge Parks Canada to release dam safety reviews as they are completed and urge the federal government ensure public safety by immediately investing in dam repairs and maintenance so as to remove the deferred maintenance deficit and bring the dam infrastructure up to at least a 'good' or 'fair' state of repair?

5. Actions have been taken by Haliburton County and some of its municipalities to improve communications during flood events. What further actions are needed – for example to raise awareness of municipal Flood Emergency Preparedness Plans and to communicate other water management issues such as during times of low water?

6. Do you agree that municipal government should work with local lake associations to facilitate improvements to water management operations and structures on reservoir and flow-through lakes as exemplified by the following list:

• Urging action to upgrade those reservoir lake dams with a Parks Canada (poor) asset condition rating of "C" or "D" viz. Canning, Horseshoe, Elliot Falls (Moore Lake), Jack's, Big Bob, Contau, Drag, Miskwabi, Eagle, Oblong, Mississagua, Moore Falls #1 (Gull Lake), Little Bob, Redstone West?

• Installing a weir on Maple Lake (Algonquin Highlands) to reduce water level fluctuations?

• Installing an automated water level gauge on Mountain Lake (Minden Hills) rather than relying on data from Horseshoe Lake?

• Improving infrastructure at the Kennisis Lake dam (Dysart et al) as part of the announced refurbishment or rebuilding of the dam, for example improving boater safety with redesigned docking and ramp facilities?

• Obtaining flood damage curves for Boshkung Lake (Algonquin Highlands), Horseshoe, Mountain, and Twelve Mile lakes (Minden Hills)?

• Reducing use of ATV's for access to the Jack's Lake dam (North Kawartha, Havelock-Belmont-Methuen) due to the resulting trail damage?

Thank you for your participation in this process. Please note that a summary of responses will be posted at www.cewf.ca

The places we walk

The path, worn and winding, passes between the gentle caress of the goldenrods and the sting of raspberry canes.

Beyond each edge is an impenetrable tangle of blackberry thickets, stunted spruce and maples that may never be brushed by the clumsy passing of man.

The trail exists because the deer, in their wisdom, deemed it to be the path of least resistance.

I'm tramping it down further, as I do each year at this time, because it passes within reach of a multitude of blackberries and raspberries.

This year, however, the berries are late and less abundant. So rather than filling my container, I fill my stomach picking one here and another there, meandering through the thicket, observing this strange world that roads have not yet marred.

And I can't help but think of other places just like this.

These are the places we walk. They are the places our vehicles have not yet touched.

They are the places that are uninteresting to those who ride ATVs or snowmobiles.

They are the places where each step presents a challenge, where the mosquitoes are unpleasant, where the wetlands are an obstacle. But mostly, they are the places where the potential for profit has not yet been exploited.

It is the latter that ultimately kills habitat like this. Some human, short of sight and bereft of soul, determines that nature's creation would look better as a subdivision or parking lot.

And suddenly, the deer must move on, "the waste ground" is shaped to serve our purpose, and the earth is scarred further by the greed of man.

Of course, I'm a hypocrite to write such things. I, too, benefit from these roads and the places man has tamed. My vehicle often sits in those parking lots and the property my house occupies was once covered in hardwoods and brush.

I concede that point.

But when you are in a place like this, when you pass that secret spot, within a stone's throw from the road's end, where a doe and her twins recently bedded down, it's not hard to be swayed.

Nor does it feel wrong to hope this place is one we will never find human purpose in.

These are the places we walk. And because we walk, we appreciate and understand these places all the more. When you walk, the terrain is not just a playing field you speed over.

It is a place where your feet connect to the earth and your senses are not dulled by the drone of a motor.

With each step you become a part of it all.

Then you discover these are the places where the snowshoe hare raises its young, where the groundhog whistles from somewhere within the tangle, where deer circle downwind and grouse strut among the thorns.

And you learn that, in these small parcels, songbirds build tenuous nests atop the brush, hawks hunt and owls await a kind of nightfall we will never know.

These are the places we walk. They are the places we have overlooked thus far.

May they be that way forever.

When you walk, the terrain is not just a playing field you speed over.

Kissin' Counsins

Garden Musings by Belinda Gallagher

One thing I have noticed since moving to this area - there are more than a few people related to one another. The very same thing happens in the plant world. And much like the people world, you can find the occasional black sheep in the midst.

This time of the year there are a couple of rogue plants in full bloom. One is the roadside weed called Viper's bugloss or Blueweed (botanically Echium vulgare). The common name of bugloss is derived from the Greek word for ox tongue referring to the similarity in shape of the leaves to the tongue and the rough, bristly surface of both. Old folklore in its native European range speaks to the use of the plant as a remedy for snakebites and, in fact, the botanical name Echium comes from the Greek word echis meaning viper.

Introduced to North America in the late 1600s, bugloss is among a handful of plants that tolerates the scorching, dry and hard-packed highway verges. The plant prefers such wasteland and has a deep taproot that enables it to withstand drought. The other key to its success is the production of a copious amount of seeds. Despite being an invasive weed, it is a pretty thing. The flowers start as pinkish buds and turn to a charming Caribbean blue that attracts many pollinators.

I grow a kissin' cousin of the common Viper's bugloss called red feathers (Echium amoenum). Hailing from a small area of Iran and the Caucasus, this plant is much shorter and a peculiar shade of not quite pink and not quite salmon. While it is a bit harder to find in garden centres, it can be grown from seed if you have a little patience. So far it has stayed put in the rock garden without seeding about.

Another roadside wildflower/weed that has kissin' cousins that are better for your garden is the common mullein, sometimes called flannel-leaf, Aaron's-rod or in the western part of the U.S.A. – "cowboy toilet paper." The plant was introduced from Greece as a medicinal plant and spread quickly across the continent.

Botanically speaking, the plant is Verbascum thapsus and like the Viper's bugloss above, it thrives in dry sandy or gravelly soil on disturbed sites. It also produces hundreds and hundreds of seeds that remain in the soil for a very long time. Most animals avoid the plant, finding the wooly leaves distasteful.

A few years ago I obtained seed for a mullein that I now consider the best of the family. It was described as seed collected from Monet's garden and while I cannot verify the actual source site, it is a beauty, worthy of the Impressionist's garden. Architecturally similar to its weedy cousin, the main difference is the size of the individual blooms. Approaching the size of a toonie, each bloom lasts for only a day, however the plant has blooms on the two-metre stalks for the better part of three months. It is a real attraction in the garden, particularly in the early morning when it is visited by scores of pollinators.

Overall, I like to seek out cousins of plants that do well in the hot, sunny, sand and gravel of our garden. The key is to choose the nice kissin' cousins, not the black sheep that might spread aggressively into our natural lands.

Belinda is a Master Gardener Emeritus, former Head of Horticulture, Royal Botanical Gardens, Hamilton and currently instructs for the University of Guelph in their Sustainable Urban Horticulture program. She happily gardens in the sand and gravel of Tory Hill.

Trio '86 bringing a legacy to Haliburton

by Zach Cox

Always different. Always exceptional. That's the tagline for the Haliburton Concert Series, and it's fitting. One of the different, exceptional performances presented by the series will be held at the Northern Lights Performing Arts Pavilion on Saturday, Sept. 13 and will feature Trio '86, presenting The Kegelstatt Legacy, a program that stems from Mozart's Kegelstatt Trio.

Trio '86 comes to Haliburton Sept. 13.

Trio '86 consists of Polish pianist Justyna Gabzdyl, Canadian viola player Keith Hamm and Krista Martynes, clarinet.

"They're doing a really interesting program, with a really unusual instrument combination," says Haliburton Concert Series treasures and marketing co-ordinator Elaine Bell.

The Kegelstatt Legacy is an exploration of how Mozart's Kegelstatt Trio has inspired other composers. Beginning with Mozart's piece, Trio '86 will then proceed to perform Schumann's Fairy Tales, Max Bruch's Eight Pieces and Kurtág's Homage to Robert Schumann.

"It will be interesting to see the different takes," says Bell.

After the show, refreshments will be provided and the audience will have an opportunity to talk with the performers.

Trio '86 is the second of three performances in the 2014 Haliburton Convert Series. In April, Foothills Brass performed Brasscapes! and pianist Mauro Bertoli will be taking to the stage on Sunday, Oct. 19.

Established in 1979, this year marks the Haliburton Concert Series' 36th season. "The group of people back then decided they wanted to bring classical music to the region," says Bell, adding there aren't many other groups that actively seek to bring classical music to Haliburton County.

The performances were held in the Legion hall until the construction of the Northern Lights Performing Arts Pavilion in 2000.

Several years in, the concert series fell into the routine of three shows per year and over the years the organizers of the series have found success in holding a performance each in May, September and October.

"We try to avoid winter," says Bell, "because many of the people who would attend the shows travel for the winter."

All together there are nine people on the Haliburton Concert Series organizing committee.

"It's entirely volunteer," says Bell, "There are usually four meetings a year."

In addition to the organizational meetings, the committee members also help out with selling tickets and manning the doors before the performances and a smaller committee determines each season's program.

"There are a number of agents that send us materials," says Bell adding that at times artists who have performed in the series before will send in information about new performance groups they're involved in.

"Then a selection committee of four of us, three of which have extensive musical backgrounds, listen to the material they send and work to create a program that varies," she says.

It is funding and support from the Ontario Arts Council is what makes the concert series possible at the current ticket prices, according to Bell.

"We're very grateful for the support of the Ontario Arts Council," she says. "Without them we couldn't hire quintets anymore."

A season pass for all three concerts in a series is $60, or $25 for students. For those who didn't purchase a seasons pass, tickets for the individual shows are available for $30, $10 for students.

To purchase tickets for the Trio '86 performance or for Mauro Bertoli, you can call June Smith at 705-457-3272 or email her at june.smith705@gmail.com. You can find the Haliburton Concert Series online at haliburtoncs.blogspot.com.

What did you think a music teacher looked like?

I don't bite.

How old are you?
8? 15? 30? 64?
Did you realize you could be learning to play something by Chopin, or that pop piece you keep humming to yourself?
Did you realize you could be learning to sing a Puccini aria, an English folk song, or a song from Annie?
It takes a little work, but I don't think you'd have read this far if you weren't willing to do that.
Let's talk about it.

Business structures - sole proprietorship, partnership or corporation?

Lauren Forbes
In Business

One of the most important decisions you'll make when starting a business is determining which legal structure suits your needs. Most businesses start as a sole proprietorship/partnership and register as a corporation later if needed. You should get advice from a qualified independent business, financial or legal advisor.

There are three main types of business structures: sole proprietorships, partnerships, and corporations. Here are some basic points to consider:

1. Sole proprietorship

With this type of business organization, you would be fully responsible for all debts and obligations related to your business and all profits would be yours alone to keep. You file a personal tax return which includes the details of your business income and expenses.

Advantages:

- Easy and inexpensive to form a sole proprietorship
- All profits will go to you directly. Tax advantages if your business is not doing well, for example, deducting your losses from your personal income, lower tax bracket when profits are low

Disadvantages:

- Unlimited liability
- Income would be taxable at your personal rate and, if your business is profitable, this may put you in a higher tax bracket
- Lack of continuity for your business, if you need to be absent
- Difficulty raising capital on your own

2. Partnerships

A partnership is a good business structure if you want to carry on a business with a partner(s). With a partnership, financial resources are combined and you can protect yourself by drawing up a business agreement and specify your share in the profits. You may also be interested in a limited liability partnership in the business. This means that you would not take part in the control or management of the business, but would be liable for debts to a specified extent only. Partnerships with more than five partners have to comply with Revenue Canada's reporting requirements. You should have a partnership agreement drawn up in case of a disagreement or dissolution with the assistance of a lawyer, to ensure that:

- You are protecting your interests
- That you have clearly established the terms of the partnership with regards to issues like profit sharing, dissolving the partnership, and more
- That you meet the legal requirements for a limited partnership (if applicable)

Advantages:

- Easy to register a partnership
- Start-up costs, management, profits and assets would be shared
- Tax advantage, if income from the partnership is low or loses money (you and your partner include your share of the partnership in your individual tax return)

Disadvantages:

- Similar to sole proprietorship, as there is no legal difference between you and your business
- Unlimited liability
- Possible development of conflict between you and your partner
- You are held financially responsible for business decisions made by your partner

3. Corporations

Incorporation can be done at the federal or provincial/territorial level. When you incorporate your business, it is considered to be a legal entity that is separate from the owners (shareholders). As a shareholder of a corporation, you will not be personally liable for the debts, obligations or acts of the corporation. However, when a corporation is small, creditors may and almost all banks will require personal guarantees of the principal owners before extending credit. The legal protection afforded the owners of a corporation can sometime far outweigh the additional expense of starting and administering a corporation. Corporations must file annual income tax returns with the Revenue Canada (federal) and the Ministry of Finance (provincial) and possibly other provinces in which it does business.

Advantages:

- Limited liability
- Ownership is transferable, therefore continuous existence
- Separate legal entity
- Possible tax advantage as taxes may be lower for an incorporated business

Disadvantages:

- A corporation is closely regulated
- More expensive to incorporate than a partnership or sole proprietorship
- Extensive corporate records required, including shareholder and director meetings, and documentation filed annually with the government
- Possible conflict between shareholders and directors and possible problem with residency of directors

The structure you choose will depend on the size and type of business, along with your personal circumstances and how much you want to grow the business. Keep in mind that if you need to, you can change your business structure later. You should get advice from a qualified independent business, financial or legal advisor.

This part of a series of articles for the entrepreneur inside all of us. If you have any questions or comments please email me at HCDC.OSEBHaliburton@gmail.com.

Taking the Numb Out of Numbers

with Don Fraser

During the summer weeks, Lake Kashagawigamog cottager Don Fraser is providing math tricks suitable for ages 10 to 110. Use mental math, paper and pencil or a calculator to dazzle your friends and family with these nine fun math tricks!

Weird Subtraction — Trick # 8

Are you bored with subtraction? Have you regrouped or borrowed once too often? If so, then have we got a method for you. You'll never have to subtract again! All you have to do is change a subtraction example to an addition ecample which will give the same answer. It's called the MAKE 9s METHOD and here's how it's done.

SUBTRACTION EXAMPLE		ADDITION EXAMPLE (with the same answer)
5212		5212
- 2865	becomes	+ 7134
2347		12346
		*2347

Notice:
2 + 7 = 9
8 + 1 = 9
6 + 3 = 9
5 + 4 = 9
2 8 6 5 becomes 7 1 3 4.
No wonder it's called the MAKE 9s METHOD.

Let's try another.

802		802
- 173	becomes	+ 826
629		1628
		*629

Can you follow the MAKE 9s METHOD?
1 + 8 = 9
7 + 2 = 9
3 + 6 = 9

Try this method with: 7006 - 3879

Now it's your turn to write down a tough subtraction example. You'll find, the harder the subtraction question, the faster the MAKE 9s METHOD. Challenge a friend to a subtraction race.

About Don:
After teaching in math education for many years at OISE/U of T, Don continues to consult and do workshops across North America. Don welcomes any questions, discussions or requests at dfraser@rogers.com

New details emerge on construction of 'the Chemical'

By Jenn Watt

Engineering specifications of the buildings that comprised the Donald chemical plant and details about who was responsible for the construction have emerged giving the Haliburton Highlands Museum a more complete picture of what was once a major employer in the Highlands.

A full article in Engineering News, a journal based in New York, printed Jan. 28, 1909, was discovered by Koshlong Lake cottager Dennis Choptiany during one of his Internet searches on local history.

He ordered the article online and, after reading it for his own research, donated it to the museum.

"It's part of our history. It's our heritage. I don't think people realize the importance of the Donald Wood Plant to the county," he said.

Choptiany read an article in the Echo earlier this summer that described the efforts to restore the former distribution centre of the Donald plant and turn it into the Eco-Innovation Centre.

Co-ordinator Leora Berman put a call out to the public looking for blueprints of the distribution centre to aid in the restoration of the building.

Haliburton Highlands Museum curator Stephen Hill said the E*ngineering News* piece provides diagrams and dimensions of the former structures he's never seen before and a thorough description of the water tower that was formerly on the site.

"The engineering specs and the description of the engineering, that was all new to us," said Hill.

"You get enough of that contemporary documentation coming to light, which has been buried for 100 years, starting to surface; I think we're on a roll now. Somewhere the answers are going to come to fruition. We might never find the blueprints, but this [article] is the next best thing," he said.

The article was printed just after the plant was completed – oven house, still house, charcoal house and boiler house, 50,000 gallon water tower and concrete dam over the Burnt River.

What is now called the distribution centre in 1909 seems to have been called the charcoal house.

Originally constructed in 1908 by the Donald Wood Products Company, the plant eventually became a key employer in the Highlands with 60 men working inside and nearly 300 men in the bush harvesting wood.

"In 1914, the plant was leased by the Standard Chemical Company, which eventually purchased it outright," reads the Haliburton County Echo and Minden Recorder in an article about the plant from July 5, 1978.

"At the peak of its productivity, the Donald Wood Products plant (later the Standard Chemical) turned 12,000 cords of prime maple per year into wood alcohol, acetate and charcoal. It was a hot, smoky hell inside the plant, the air laden with grey gases and stifling with the heat of burning coal," the article says.

The plant closed in 1937 due to high transportation costs for wood, but was reopened a few years later during the Second World War. When the war ended, the plant closed entirely and the parts were removed and sold off.

Hill said many area cottages built at that time have bricks from the Donald plant used in their chimneys.

"At that time, few cottages had electric conveniences, so wood stoves were used for heating and cooking," he wrote in a note to the Echo.

The classified page from the Haliburton County Echo dated Aug. 28, 1952 shows "good, clean used brick" for sale. "1,300 red, 900 white. $60 takes all" says the ad placed by C.M. Emmerson.

The Engineering News article also changes the common perception that Westinghouse built the plant. According to this new document, it was William H. Oliver, J.M. Wilson and Pitt & Co. of Niagara Falls, responsible for construction.

Choptiany hopes that the effort to rejuvenate the distribution centre will increase knowledge about the history of "the Chemical" and generate a few more important documents like the one he found.

A cottager for 35 years, he said he always wondered about the skeletal structures that remain alongside Koshlong Lake Road in Donald, but it wasn't until relatively recently that he learned more about them.

"It was always a curiosity. It was much more visible when we first started coming up to the lake. Now the underbrush has blocked the skeletons of the buildings. We always wondered: what was it?" he said.

Choptiany joined his lake association and volunteered to work on the lake plan, documenting history of the area back to the First Nations people. It was during that research process that he found out more about those remains.

Any new information about Donald and Standard Chemical are a delight for Hill, who hopes the buildings will be preserved.

"I don't want somebody to demolish it as an eyesore and I don't want people to turn their back on it," he said.

"Anything of Donald I feel should be preserved because that was the only other major settlement in Dysart Township and it was a fairly good employer in its day."

Getting ready for autumn

By Steve Galea

It doesn't take true genius to realize that autumn is just around the corner. All you need to do is look at the demeanour of our local duck population. Each has a stupid grin on its face that says, "I'm going south this winter. What about you?"

Frankly, it's no wonder people shoot at them.

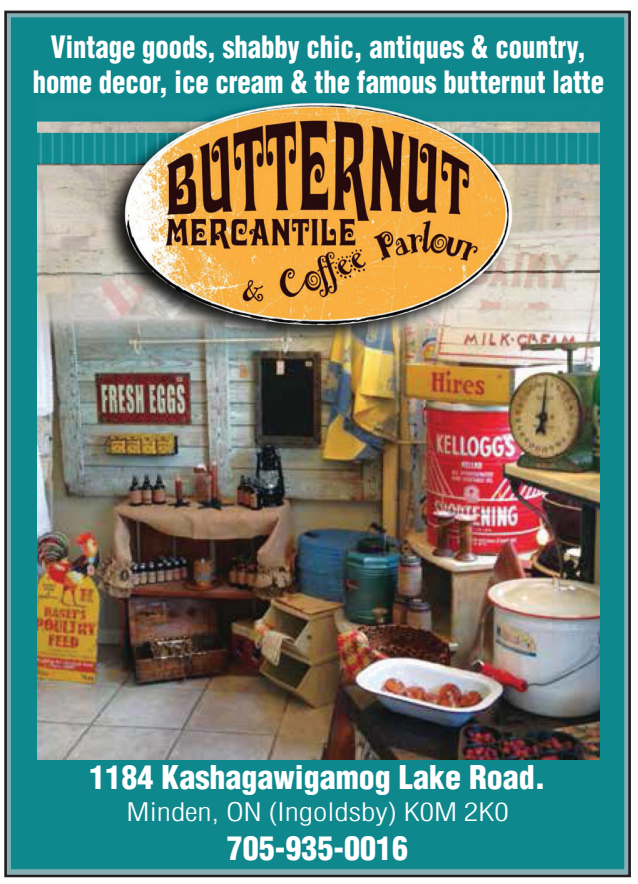
If you have no ducks in sight, just look at young parents with kids going to school for the first time. They're the only creatures I know that are happier than the ducks.

Despite this, I happen to think the ducks are the ones who are missing out. Autumn, after all, is a wonderful time of year. All you need to do is talk to any of the tourists who are driving around on our back roads at the peak of fall colours. You'll soon learn that others actually drive for hours to be here in autumn – and only some of them are lost.

Here are my 10 favourite things about autumn.

1. Trying to say with a straight face to a group of tourists, "I'm glad you like our autumn colours. We locals have been busy painting all those leaves for the last two weeks."
2. Alternately, saying, "You haven't by chance seen my flock of trained geese? I was teaching them the alphabet and they just mastered the letter V."
3. Putting up an ad on Kijiji that says, "Free Coloured Leaves. Limit two bags per customer."
4. Advising lost tourists that they need to go south to hit the main road. Then sitting back to watch as they follow a flock of ducks circling a pond.
5. Finally discovering where all those kites went.
6. Knowing that the loud bang I just heard is just a rifle shot and not those dangerous fireworks that go off all summer.
7. Hunter orange is my favourite colour anyhow.
8. Watching the school bus driver as he/she comes to the sudden realization it's a long time till June rolls around again.
9. Cardigans and checked shirts become stylish again. Separately and not with socks and sandals. Remember that.
10. Watching some gullible kid wait for the evergreens to turn colour.

Autumn is filled with wonderful experiences just like that. So enjoy them and take lots of photos too. We didn't paint all those leaves for nothing you know.



Canoe

Poem by Sylvie Kalenda

Clots of rain dripping from Sky smudging the husk of the red canoe
Wilting on the dock, waiting for someone to come to stroke its peeling skin,
To quench its thirst for journey again.
Scratches and scars tattooed on its body, memories of trips it used to take,
Sliding into the lake, how cool the water felt on its spine
Gliding along the glass surface without effort, listening to the splashes of its companions,
Slipping into the water, slashing its surface, as smears of trees bellowed Hello to one of their own,
Some remembering when the red canoe was just a seed,
Sprouting in the forest alongside them.
For years they grew in height and girth, until one morning an intruder came and killed their kin,
Dragged the carcass away to the clearing where the trees watched at first in horror then in awe as the birth of the red canoe unfurled before their eyes.
The stranger's hands sliced and carved and whittled until the creature was fully formed,
Then painted it the colour of sun as it drips each evening into the hills,
Bleeding all over the trees.
For years the trees watched this strange creature that used to be one of them,
Glibe through the water towards and unknown place where they've never been Wondering whether the red canoe recognizes them, feels a flinching in its bones
A twinge in its soul when it passes the smears of green that used to be its kin.
As the trees stoop and wither in the forest, so too the red canoe has grown old,
Abandoned by the hands that birthed it into being that summer so many summers ago.
The hands that sliced and carved tne whittled now shake as they grip the paddle,
As they graze the husk of the canoe that shrivels on the dock, waiting for another journey.
Instead storm after storm pummels it, as its brethren in the forest tremble and quake,
Some of them felled by lightning bolts that split their limbs and shatter their spines.
How the red canoe longs for the hands to come stroke its back,
Instead of these fists of rain, that batter it over and over again.
How it craves the touch of lake again.
One morning when sun blares brillian blue, the red canoe feels fingers creeping along its spine like spiders.
They feel lighter than the hands it remembers. These strange new hands turn it over and spokes of sunlight pierce its soul.
The red canoe purrs as the small hands slide its body into the lake.
How cool, how smooth, how familiar, as these fresh strangers jump in and begin with their paddles to dip and slice into the lake, carrying the canoe away from the dock,
Away from the hands that rest on the chair on the shore, watching as the grandchildren embark on their first journey in the red canoe, that will show them the way,
That will lead them to the unknown place as the smear of trees watches and cheers as the weathered hadn waves from the shore at the red prick of light as it ignites the horizon.

August

The day blank as a canvas waiting for me to splatter it with summer as I lay flat as a plant on the dock, wisps of clouds smeared across sky blue as a newborn's eyes.

Humps of hills dribbling into the lake, I swirl my fingers through the shimmering green,

Drizzle the dock with drips of water, as the yellow tennis ball of sun blazes down on me.

I bake, I sizzle with the noonday sun as I feast on hills and sky,

The weathered wood of the dock warming my spine.

My fingers graze the skin of a stone that I plucked from the shore, smooth as glass,

Round and milky as the moon, I coddle this pebble in my palm, a speck of summer, then it's gone.

I blink as I release the stone from my hand,

Watch it sink to the bottom of the lake, where it lands beside the clamshell,

Glistening sliver like the wings of a butterfly.

A flicker of nostalgia flutters through me, as a boy streaks past me on the dock,

Cannonballs into the lake, crashing into the reflection of a cloud.

The splash splatters all the over the dock, drenching me.

I smile at the boy flailing in the lake, bellowing at his friends to follow.

Summer sprawling forever for them, each day ripe as a peach that they suck the guts out of.

Two more boys streaking past me, bellowing from the bottom of their lungs before they leap into the reflection of another cloud, smashing it to smithereens.

Shards of long ago summers remain, prickling my memory, as I squint at the glints of sun flirting with the wavelets denting the lake.

I listen to the boys holler as they cannonball.

Surrounded by summer, I surrender.

Whip off my flip flops, peel off my top and sarong, tug self-consciously at my bathing suit to hide the pebbles dimpling my skin.

I leap in, leaving my grown-up self behind on the dock, as I laugh and splash along with the boys,

As I sink underwater with my eyes clenched tight, the sunlight of summer still seeping through, as my hands trawl the bottom for treasures.

I resurface when I run out my breath, blinking up at the hills and sky with the wonder of a newborn's eyes.

I trade with the boy named Ben, a clamshell for a white stone.

The boy named Taylor offers me snail shell for free.

We sprawl on the dock in a puddle of sun while summer smears us with warmth, splatters us with splotches of light.

Dining in the HIGHLANDS

Featuring:

Bonnie View Inn

The Bonnie View Inn offers fine dining in a superb setting.

Overlooking sparkling Lake Kashagawigamog, the Inn's Lakeview Dining Room is the kind of place where the stresses of life melt away. And it's made even better by the amazing culinary offerings created by Head Chef and owner Monte Miscio and his amazing sous chefs Mike Merritt and Aidan McKnight.

Every night, the trio exercise remarkable culinary talents from 6 to 8 pm and the results never fail to delight.

"We take pride in our quality, value and service," says Monte.

Their wonderful menu includes exciting nightly specials, alongside elegant entrees such as elk, rack of lamb and duck. Patrons also enjoy sumptuous chicken, fish and beef dishes as well as wonderful salads and soups. Special options such as a kid's menu can be ordered. So too can gluten-, lactose-, dairy-free, low-fat and vegan offerings. The dress code is smart-casual and cell phones are not permitted, so you can focus on what's truly important.

Patrons can bring their own wine or take advantage of a fantastic wine list and fully stocked bar.

And when the lakeside setting beckons even more, there's lunch at the summer patio and Kawartha Dairy ice cream at Scoops until the end of August.

To reserve a table at the Bonnieviewcall 1-800-461-0347 or 705-457-2350 or email bonnieview.inn @ sympatico.ca. You call also visit http://www.bonnieviewinn.com/ to peruse the menu and plan that next special meal. You won't regret it.
